dress, Cardinal Gibbons spoke briefly. He expressed his deep sense of gratitude over the visit of the Presidential party. He added that the President and Governor Hughes were having a strenuous week and predicted that by the end of it the President will have lost some of his avoirdupois. He said he re-echoed the sentiment of the President and the Governor that this is a country of religious liberty where all could worship God according to their own conscience.

ACCUSE MEYER AT BOAT RACE

In a report to the Government the revenue officers who kept order at the Harvard-Yale race at New London declared that Secretary of the Navy George von L. Meyer defied the authorities by following the racers in a launch. E. H. Harriman was arrested two years ago for this case.

It is a rule made law by Congress that no boat shall go on the course, not even one conveying the President of the United States. In the report it is charged that when the racing crews put off a launch from the Dolphin flying the flag of the Secretary of the Navy started down the course. It was halted, but did not stop soon it swung out of the racing lane, but was still in violation of the law.

In Washington today it was reported from the office of the Secretary of the Navy that Mr. Meyer had permission to follow the race.

President Eliot Is Rather Hard on His "Publishers"

The Publishers Might Well Drop
Mr. Eliot and Publish Some Good
Books Instead of His Terrible List

Professor Eliot, president emeritus of Harvard—the gentleman who advised young men not to strive for money and who has been reaching out for money in many directions himself—has been talking about his publishers.

In public speeches, in interviews, and otherwise, casually—in the most approved style of modern advertising promotion—Professor Eliot told that he was preparing a very valuable list of books.

The books were to fill a shelf five feet long, and anybody who read those books "would be a well-educated man."

This was worked up in the newspapers industriously everywhere, much free advertising being obtained. The most able patent medicine press agent or dramatic press agent has rarely done better.

After a decent advertising pause, Professor Eliot gave out a list of some of his books. His poor publishers must have felt as the press agent feels when he discovers on the opening night that his star can't dance, sing or act, and is not particularly good-looking.

The publishers, energetic and frank, seized upon one of the fearful, emotional moments in Professor Eliot's life to send out a lot of circulars. Fearful alumni were raising a half million dollars for Professor Eliot, who hates money. They were giving freely. The Eliot publishers said, in substance, "Spend just a few hundred dollars more, buy Mr. Eliot's five feet of books, and get a fine education by chewing your way along five feet of the crimson binding."

Some of the newspapers asked Professor Eliot whether he thought it exactly dignified for the head of Harvard to lend himself to an advertising scheme.

Thereupon he explained that his modest desire was to promote knowledge, whereas his publishers "were purely commercial," hence the objectionable advertising.

It seems, according to Professor Eliot, that the low-down, ordinary publishers cared nothing for knowledge and were exploiting him, much to his chagrin.

It happens that those publishers have done a great deal more than Professor Eliot has ever done to spread knowledge in this world. For in the regular course of business they have published millions of good books, in addition to much trash; whereas Professor Eliot, in the pedantic course of his career, has published thousands of foolish and undemocratic sentiments, and not a word to justify the fads made over him.

Now he turns around and attributes commercialism to his publishers, and nobility of soul to himself.

We advise the publishers to throw Professor Eliot overboard and get up a good list of books of their own, and sell them on their merits.

Second, we advise all the readers of our various newspapers, numbering several millions, to LET PROFESSOR ELIOT AND HIS FOOLISH SKELETON OF BOOKS SEVERELY ALONE. It is about the worst list we have ever seen among many bad lists. It might change a decent citizen into a bewildered, half-baked literary prig. It could not possibly give anybody an education, or the beginning of an education.

The Fashion in Eating Meat

Fashion rules in food as in other matters, and when the Presidential and Vice-Presidential families, seconded by the household of Mr. James Bryce, the most distinguished member of the diplomatic corps, decide that meat is hardly good to eat, that fact is likely to make an appreciable difference in the markets and in the general methods of domestic economy.

The mere physiological arguments for and against vegetarianism are too involved and intricate to be convincing.

People don't dine on scientific principles, or make love and war by the book of arithmetic. The greatest of social influences is CUSTOM—and her liveliest sister, FASHION.

If you eat too much meat, the main reason why you do it is that OTHER PEOPLE DO.

A million families in America, living on small incomes, buy meat every day that they can't afford—simply because they would FEEL 'GODD' if they didn't.

They would feel that they had fallen below the established American standard of living.

That is to say that the eating of meat once or twice a day has acquired in this country a symbolic significance which is quite distinct from any question of what people like or what is good for their health.

A breakfast is a badge of respectability and well-being.

Now, if Fashion should fly forth through the country from the "North Shore," and, with a whisk of her wand, should dissolve the sentimental relation between pride and "porterhouse," it would be A GOOD HOT-WEATHER JOB, AND WOULD SAVE MONEY.

Fashion is called a foolish and feeble jade, but she can perform MIRACLES OF SOLID WISDOM—as of airy folly.
